This afternoon Clayton Gilliam's name came to light on my desk once again, and I made a call to him. I thought perhaps you might like to know something about his present status.

He tells me that he is now nearly blind, and really cannot see to read. He had to give up driving his car a year ago.

Five weeks ago he had a quadruple bypass and is recovering well. He is now walking five miles a day.

He does not have a wife, and I did not pursue this matter.

His childr (maybe children) live in Florida.

He sounded very cheerful, recalled each of you.

My guess is that he would appreciate some contact with each of you in the future. A letter would require someone to read it for him, but a phone call he would be able to handle very well.

I'm still looking for James W. Tuttle and George Sarver. Any assistance, or ideas any of you can provide, will be appreciated.
