

This document describes how the following memorial in France to the men of the Sleepytime Gal came to be by the efforts of Frenchman Jean-Luc Maurer.

The 9th December 1944 this B-17 #43-38362 crashed in the forest near Fouchy, France. The Boeing belonged to the 306th BG of the 8th Air Force.

Shot by FLAK, the crew bailed out over the Black Forest near Wolfach, Germany. Unfortunately the pilot's chute didn't open and he was killed.

All other crew members were captured and interned in a prisoner camp near Barth, Germany. The co-pilot was severely wounded and one of his legs was amputated. On the right you can see the clock of the B-17. Still working today!

I am passionate by the history of the aircraft facts that took place during WW2 within the valley where I live. Since seven years I investigate on a US bomber crash which took place in Fouchy (67220). This bomber crashed on a wooded hill (GDS data are: 48.309031, 7.224927 on maps.google.fr). Details of the reason why this aircraft crashed or even the exact date are unknown. My intention is to find the crew and to honor the courage they had to fly over the enemy's territory despite the risks (anti-aircraft defense, interceptor fighters).

I used different approaches:

- newspaper articles
- meetings with eyewitnesses
- research at the crash site where you can still find aluminum pieces. With those, I was able to determine the bomber type: a Boeing B17G

I was lucky in locating and excavating the bomber original data plate. See enclosed picture of it. The data on the plate:

MANUFACTURED BY BOEING; MODEL B17G; -SERIAL 9340

-ENGINE WRIGHT R-1820-97; -A.C.T.C. No W-535-AC202 ??; BOEING AIRCRFT COMPANY

If I am not wrong, the plate corresponds to the manufacturer's serial number "9340" of a B17 serial number USSAF "43-38362" assigned 306 Bomb Group. The information I obtained for that crash of Dec 09 1944 on the internet page www.merkki.com ( Prisoners of War Stalag Luft 1 ) are identical with the statements I got: an empty bomb-bay, no bodies were found indicating they had time to bail out of the aircraft and the crash date between Nov 26, 1944 and beginning of 1945.

Do you have documentation of the B17 which could confirm? The details I seek are:

- photo of the B17 because I noticed several details (not painted, the side machine-gunners stations where eccentric, additional external armored plate for the rear gunner, the tail is of a Cheyenne pumpkin type

- Macr 11342

- ... every document which could confirm my investigations

If you know anyone interested to help me in my investigations I would be very happy to collaborate with them.

Thank you in advance, and kind regards,

MAURER Jean-Luc

Attachments: Sleepytime Gal.jpg; 9dec44macr.pdf; 9 Dec 44 Mission Report.pdf

Jean-Luc,

We had some luck researching the B-17 USAAF serial number 43-38362 that does in fact correspond to a Boeing built aircraft with Boeing serial number 9340. This aircraft was assigned to the 306th Bombardment Group, 369th Bombardment Squadron flying missions out of USAAF Station 111 at Thurleigh, England during WWII.

The aircraft was named "Sleepytime Gal" and had nose art reflecting the name. Our archives revealed a picture of the aircraft nose art that I have attached to this email. If you look closely, you can see the Air Force Serial number just above the artwork.

The information that our secretary provided you regarding those men who were on the crew of Sleepytime Gal on its last mission is accurate. I am attaching the Missing Air Crew Report (MACR) #11342 which lists their names, and I have also attached the mission report along with the post mission interrogation form that would have been filled out by an intelligence officer had the crew returned. Eight of the nine crewmen successfully bailed out of the aircraft and were taken as POW's, and returned at the end of the war. However, the pilot, Lt Robert Brown perished with the airplane.

Sleepytime Gal was shot down on 9 December 1944 on a mission to bomb Stuttgart. Mr. Russell Strong, a founding member of the 306th BGHA and author, wrote about that day in his book "First Over Germany" (a history of the 306th) and the loss of this aircraft:

"Meager flak was reported over Stuttgart on 9 December but it was sufficient to knock down one 306th plane.... 1st Lt Robert H. Brown's plane was flying in the number 3 position in the lead group of the 40th CW (combat wing) when it was hit. 1st Lt William Giglio, copilot, had started flying combat missions with Brown in mid July and, on his 35th mission, was seriously wounded. With the number 4 engine and the right wing on fire, the order was given to abandon ship. Giglio had been hit in the right knee by a piece of flak, which then continued up into his thigh and came out close to his torso. Giglio was bleeding badly, but got out of his seat and went down to the nose hatch., which proved to be frozen shut. The bomb bay doors were opened and Giglio crawled back out of the catwalk, through the base of the upper turret and then dived out the bomb bay. Leaving the plane at over 20,000 feet, the wounded man permitted himself to drop a considerable distance before opening his parachute.

When he landed, Giglio's leg was further battered and he was unable to move from the spot. He was almost immediately picked up by some German soldiers and taken to a nearby town. Up to that time he was not sure on which side of the German-French border he was, until he saw a street sign that read 'Adolph Hitler Strasse'. The soldiers put a tourniquet on Giglio's bleeding leg, loaded him into a truck with some other members of his crew and set out. Shortly they came to a hospital and left the wounded man there. The copilot was treated, and after a week the doctors determined that they could not save his leg and amputated it... Only the pilot was killed and it was never determined whether he had bailed out of the plane or not."

So there is what information we hold on aircraft 43-38362, the last mission that it flew when it was shot down, and the events of that day and the fate of the crew. It should be noted that if Giglio had successfully returned from this mission, he would have been relieved from combat duty and would have been transferred to a non-combat ground job or back to the United States. It was his last mission!

I hope that this information is useful to you, especially the attached documents and the picture of the aircraft. Please let me know if you receive this email all right and if you are able to open the attachments. If I can be of further assistance, please feel free to ask.

Fouchy, 9 août 1944

Le 9 décembre 1944 s'est écrasé, sur les hauteurs de Fouchy, un Boeing B17 Forteresse Volante. Cet avion immatriculé 43-38362 appartenait au 306th Bombardment Group de la 8<sup>e</sup> Air Force Américaine. Touché outre-Rhin par la DCA allemande, l'appareil continua sa course vide, l'équipage s'étant parachuté dans la région de Wolfach en Forêt-Noire. Le pilote fut tué, son parachute ne s'étant pas ouvert. Le reste de l'équipage, arrêté, termina la guerre dans le camp de prisonnier de Barth dans le nord de l'Allemagne. Le copilote, blessé par les éclats de DCA, dut être amputé d'une jambe.
